

Donowitz, Jeffrey

Jeffrey Donowitz, M.D. was originally from Charlottesville, Virginia. He attended Davidson College and obtain a Bachelor of Arts in Anthropology with a focus on the shamanistic medical traditions in the Nepalese hill country. Following college, Dr. Donowitz interned at the Arnold P. Gold Foundation, which works to support humanism in medicine. He attended St. George's University School of Medicine and received his M.D. in 2010. He trained in general pediatrics at the Children's Hospital of Richmond at Virginia Commonwealth University. Dr. Donowitz decided to continue his training at the Children's Hospital of Richmond in Pediatric Infectious Diseases. During his fellowship he was awarded the Pediatric Scientist Development Program Fellowship and worked in the William Petri lab at the University of Virginia. Dr. Donowitz's research program focuses on Small Intestine Bacterial Overgrowth and Environmental Enteropathy in children from low-income countries. He currently resides in Richmond, Virginia with his wife Katherine who is also a pediatrician.